SUICIDE*D. A Carpenter Shoots Himself
With a Rifle.

Last Friday morning Coroner McMahon was notified that D. A. Carpenter living north-west of town had been found in his room with a bullet hole above his heart. Foul play was suspected.

The Coroner and Dr. McDonald, together with the jury, composed of the following members: C. R. Griffith, Chas. Smithers, John Weightman, H. E. King, E. G. Bjerneby, and Harry Williams, went to the scene of the tragedy and held an inquest.

The investigation of the jury, and the post-mortem held on the body by Dr. Macdonald, established the fact that it was a case of suicide and that the first suspicions of foul play were groundless. A verdict of suicide was rendered after a thorough investigation.

Carpenter and his family lived upstairs, while the lower rooms were occupied by the family of E.C. Douglass.

According to the story told by Douglass, Carpenter had come to Kalspell that day and had been drinking heavily. He returned home about 11 o'clock, but all the family had retired for the night previous to his arrival. Douglas had gone to his room and heard Carpenter walk about as if in distress. Carpenter had been in his room for some time when Douglass heard a noise what he thought was caused by Carpenter throwing his shoes on the floor, followed by gasps and smothered groans. Knowing that he had come home intoxicated Douglass thought he was sick, and did not go to him. The groans continued for some time and died away. Shortly afterwards the clock struck twelve.

Next morning Carpenter did not put in an appearance, but at first this did not cause any uneasiness, but at 7 o'clock they went to his room and found him on the floor, with the rifle by his side, dead. He had removed his coat, vest and shoes, placed the muzzle of the gun against his breast and pulled the trigger.

The weapon used was a 44-60 Winchester rifle. The bullet struck a rib, and come out on the shoulder cutting an artery, causing him to bleed to death. A letter was found addressed to his wife in which he stated that domestic troubles was the cause for the deed.

A Sad Death.

When we hear of a bereavement falling upon a family, a desire comes to us to say something or do something to relieve their sadness and distress, and yet, how impossible is the self-imposed task.

To lose one out of a family of many and resignedly say "God's will be done," is a difficult duty to perform, a prayer hard to utter sincerely; but to be bereft of the only one is a greater trial. It is a sad spectacle to witness day by day one of our loved ones wasting away, and yet, the process seems to prepare us for the inevitable end. But when death comes as it did to little Joseph W. Lebert, like a flash, the stroke is almost too severe.

Think of it, in less than a brief half hour this little one was transformed from a bright, healthy, laughing lad to a cold, silent corpse.

Last Sunday the sad news that little Joseph W. Lebert, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Lebert had been seized with convulsions, caused by the bursting of a blood vessel in the brain and had died in a few minutes, traveled rapidly. Good friends hastened to the home of the stricken family and all the kind offering born of love for them was freely bestowed. They did what they could and all they could to soften the blow and dull the pangs of grief that had so suddenly fallen to the lot of the heart broken father and mother.

On Monday the remains of the little boy were taken to the Catholic church followed by a long procession of the Knights and Ladies of the Maccabees, and friends of the family. Rev. P. H. Gallagher preached a beautiful sermon, taking for his text "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Afterwards the body was taken to the cemetery and laid to John Luoma was instantly killed by a fall of rock and coal at Belt Friday.
