Archie Pearson has received a Japanese flag from his son, Robert Pearson, who went overseas with Company F and has been in the Pacific area ever since.
The flag is about 3x4 feet, with the rising sun in the center, two Japanese characters around the border. It is believed that the characters represent the names of the men in the company. The flag has a bullet hole through it, so it was evidently carried into battle by the Jap troops. Included in the package with the flag was a number of wooden combs which the Japanese used and a number of sea shells picked up on the beach in New Guinea. They appear to have been highly polished, but are in their natural state, Mr. Pearson says.
The flag will be displayed in the windows of the American Legion headquarters in the near future.
