FUNERAL YESTERDAY FOR F. B. LINDERMAN, WELL KNOWN AUTHOR

Funeral services for Frank Bird Linderman, authority on the Plains Indians and author of many books on Indian life and lore and on frontier days in Montana, were held yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Waggener & Campbell chapel. A simple Masonic service was conducted in accordance with his wishes, George W. Hunt, past master of the Kalispell lodge, delivering the funeral oration. Mr. Linderman was an honorary 33rd degree Mason and had been prominent in the work of the Scottish Rite temple in Helena for many years.

The pallbearers were from many parts of the state. From the University of Montana, where Mr. Linderman frequently lectured and where he was given an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws some years ago, came Dr. N. J. Lennes, Dr. Harold G. Merriam, and Professor W. H. Whicker. From Helena, his former home, came Archie Bray, a brother Mason, Joseph Sherburne of Browning, like Mr. Linderman a friend of the Indian, and Dr. W. S.

to his Montana today. His spirit, we are sure, is already there, roaming the hills and the trails he loved. Because of him, Montana, its Indians, its French voyageurs, its cowboys and its rugged country, have become endeared to all Americans. Through him his Indian friends, whom he loved dearly, have had an interpreter. They made him a blood brother and called him "Co-Ne-TaTSee-Na-E-Ket." He understood them and the nature they loved and he lived courageously, the better for their simple faith and honor.

"Now he has gone home with the blanket Indian that has trailed the buffalo over the divide that time has set between the pioneer and the crowd, to quote from the preface of his 'Indian Why Stories.' Part of his courage and his hardy spirit he brought to Montana as a boy instilled within him from his forebears, who had helped shove ahead the frontiers of the new land in Ohio.

"His old friends and his new-made friends here, where he walked away toward the distant campfires, to his old companions, were the better for knowing Frank Linderman. 'Happiness,' someone in a newspaper the other day quoted, is "weather in the heart," and he had weather in his and we all felt the glow."

Whitney, Phyllis Bjork, Kathryn Beatty, Patsy Muleahy, and Beverly Whaley, accompanied by Louis Ackerman. The cast presented Miss Jaqueth with a bouquet of carnations and snapdragons.

The Lutheran minister, Rev. J. Hestenes, and wife, and the several Sunday school teachers gave the Sunday school children a picnic at Lake Blaine Saturday afternoon. Miss Solld and Miss Adams attended and helped in the games and stunts. A delicious lunch concluded the event. Sunday school will close through the summer months.

friend of the Indian, and Dr. W. S. Little of Kalispell were also pall bearers. Interment was in the family plot in Conrad Memorial cemetery.

Mr. Linderman, who died of a heart attack in Santa Barbara, California, where with Mrs. Linderman he had been passing several months, first came to the Flathead country from Chicago in March 1885. It was while living the carefree life of the frontiersman that he first saw Goose Bay on Flathead lake. Though later he was for many years in business in Helena he still dreamed of establishing his home there and in 1917 that dream was realized. All of his books, with the exception of "Indian Why-Stories," written in Helena, were produced at Goose Bay.

It was during his first years in the Flathead that he learned to know the Indian and as this friendship grew and the plight of the red man in the advancing settlement of this state became worse, he became the Indian's counsellor, defender and interpreter. At one time, failing in this state to secure aid for the starving "Rocky Boy" tribe, whose brother he was by adoption, he went to Washington to see Franklin K. Lane, then secretary of the interior, and succeeded in securing a reservation for them.

Writing of this friendship the Santa Barbara News-Press said in an editorial the day following his death:

Frank Bird Linderman had a world-wide reputation as an authority on Indian lore and history, and was famous as an author and artist. But, if he could have his way, he would prefer to be known simply as a friend of the American Indian.

No white man ever had more and deeper friendships among the Indians of the west than did Frank Linderman. And these were richly deserved, because he dedicated his life from boyhood to fighting interminable battles for their rights — even carrying this legal warfare up to the "Great White Father" in Washington. He was still vigorously the advocate of his red brothers and their sympathetic interpreter at the time of his passing in Santa Barbara yesterday.

The sorrow felt by his white friends will be no greater than that of the various tribes of the northwest, when his Indian brethren learn the "Sign Talker" has pitched his tepee in the Great Beyond. And he will become as much a part of their lore as any of their own chiefs.

The famous Plenty-Coups perhaps paid Frank Linderman his greatest compliment when he said of the author's biography of the old Crow chief, "You have felt my heart."

The Daily Missoulian in an editorial said in part:

"The fame that came to Frank Bird Linderman, probably the best-informed of American writers on Indian lore, brought added glory to this Western Montana country. . . . Dr. Linderman belonged to the period that developed other famous Montanans, like Paxson and Russell. Each of these contributed his part toward bringing the courage and the vigor of the West to people who knew little or nothing of life in this part of the Continent."

In a telegram from New York, Hermann Hagedorn, noted biographer and friend of the family said: "We feel grateful for what Frank was and for what he gave to our country and will continue to give to succeeding generations. The memory of his friendship will always be a source of gratitude and pride to us."

Littl Paulding, writer of an art column in the Santa Barbara News-Press, said:
